POETRY

From the Halifox Free Press. THE INDIAN MAID'S LAMENT. In Indian maid was sitting where Her lover stain in battle slept; Her maiden veil, ver us a black bair, Came down o'er eyes that wept; And wildly in her woodland tongue, This sad and simple lay she sung:

I've pailed away the shrabs that grew t'oo choe apon thy steeping bead And broke the forest boughs that threw Their shadows o'er thy bed; That, skining from the sweet south west. The sunbeam night reports thy rest.

It was a long and weary road.

Tout led thee to the pleasant coast Where thou in his screne abode Hast wet thy father's ghost; Where everlasting autumn hies On the still helds and strony ekies.

Twas I the breidered mecksee made That shed thee for that distant land, Twas I they bows and arrows laid, Beside thy suit cold hand; Thy bow in many a battle bent, The arrows never vainly sent.

With wampum belt I crossed the breast, And wrapt thee in the bison's hide, And laid the fund that viewed thee best In plenty by thy side, And decked thee bravely, as became A warrior of illustrious name.

Thear't happy now, for thou hast past. The darksome journey of the grave, And in the land of light at last, Bust joined the good and brave: Amid the flushed and balmy air, The bravest and the loyeliest there.

Yet to the own Jear Indian maid Thy tho'ts will sometimes eastward stray; To her who sits where thou art laid, And weeps the hours away. Yes! almost can her griet forget, To think that thou dost love her yet.

And thou by one of those calm lakes That is a shining cluster lie, On which the south wind scarcely breaks The mage of the sky.

Hast built a bower for thee and me, Beneath the tow'ring thip tree.

And dost thou wait and watch to meet My spirit sent to join the blest!
And wondering what detains my feet From the oright land of rest!

Dost seem in every sound to hear.
The rustling of my footsteps near!

A desperate, and probably a most bloody duel (says a Correspondent) was lately prevented in the amusic al world, by the interference of a friendly second ad die fortunately screwed up in concert pitch for the harmonic purpose. The minor-keyed Cromer, it seems, called out the con-ferioso Giordowichi, for no orchrestra jusuit og his father. It happened that day, heroically agreed to draw a trigger against file first string of each other's life. The instruments were prepared; but, happily, time was not duly kept as one of them only began his dead march to Pad-dington in three flats, white the other had run his twoid fugue to the termination of the passage, marked for the last movement, whore he remained con effectionso! From this error in counting, a confused interval of 24 bars rest took place, in which the tworondeau, which, after a long shake, closed the perfeemance by a very laughable Finale. - H. F.
